Rensselaer Brown Bag Workshop: Course Planning - Active Learning Ideas to Keep Your Students Engaged

When students participate in any type of course activity other than watching or listening to a lecture, they are participating in 'active learning.' Many faculty at Rensselaer are engaged in incorporating activities into their lectures to promote student participation and engagement with the course content. Active learning strategies can give you quick, fun ideas to keep students interested and test their understanding. It can be used as a companion or alternative to the flipped classroom environment, which supports additional learning activities both inside and outside of the classroom.

If you are interested in hearing more about various active learning exercises that you may be able to implement into your course, then this workshop is for you. Please join us to discuss the practice of active learning, the benefits, and some of the more popular active learning exercises.

This workshop will be held on Thursday, December 17th from 11:30 am - 12:30 pm in Academy Hall (AH), Conference Room 3627. Please bring a laptop or mobile device.

Maureen Fodera (Office of Undergraduate Education) and Jenna Pitera (Office of Graduate Education) will be teaming up to present this workshop.
To register, click the following link: Active Learning Workshop Information and Registration.

Please register by Monday, December 14th. Space is limited.